

Print

Email

Facebook

Twitter

More

Death doulas explain why everyone should have an end-of-life plan

ABC Radio Melbourne By Nicole Mills

Posted 7 Aug 2018, 7:00am

PHOTO: Death doula Carmen Barnsley thinks people should talk more about death and be more informed about their options. (ABC News: Nicole Mills)

A new breed of doulas are helping break down the fear around death, which they say shouldn't be a confronting word.

Carmen Barnsley from Melbourne said just like birth doulas, death doulas were there to provide support, knowledge and assistance during times of upheaval and uncertainty.

"I find it is just a privilege and a humbling experience to be where life enters this world and when life leaves it," the former nurse said.

"Death is just as amazing an experience as birth is, but we celebrate birth and we deny death."

Ms Barnsley has had her own experience with death. Her son died when he was five months old.

While she was in the depths of numbing grief, the hospital handed over a Yellow Pages and told her and her husband they needed to pick a funeral parlour.

It was the first of many conversations she had during the grieving process that made her realise that as a society, we need to start doing death better.

"Some cultures do death beautifully. It's a reflection of the person's life, whereas I think we do it pretty poorly," she said.

"The honest thing I can say about the doulas in my network is everyone has been through a personal process of death.

"A lot of the doulas who are coming from personal experiences are coming from terrible personal experiences and were seeking answers to improve it so that doesn't happen to another person again."

Emotions run high

Ms Barnsley said her colleagues came from all walks of life, having worked as hospital chaplains, accountants, social workers, celebrants and in the funeral industry.

She wants people to understand that knowledge is power, especially when it comes to death.

"A death doula isn't about dying, it's about allowing that individual to live until they die.

"I find when somebody puts a plan in place they will then live until they die, as ironic as that sounds."

She recommends having conversations about death when you're young and healthy instead of leaving it until death approaches when emotions run high.

"In the medical profession we have informed consent. I'd love for end-of-life issues to have informed choices.

"I don't have a terminal disease but I have an advanced life care directive in place.

"My doctor has got a copy; this is probably a little bit touchy at the moment, but mine is actually up on the [My Health Record] healthcare site ... so that any hospital in Australia can access my directive."

The dying space

The main thing Ms Barnsley wants people to know is that death doesn't have to be impersonal and there is no prescribed process to follow.

"You don't need a funeral home, and some people don't even know that," she said.

"You may need to get one to transport someone, but you can have a loved one at home, you can organise transport straight to burial or cremation or whatever the person's choice is.

"[In the past] a family did care for loved ones dying; it wasn't in a hospital, it wasn't medicalised, it wasn't institutionalised and that was the norm.

"But there became a fear factor with death; let's take it behind closed doors, we don't talk about it, and there's still people within our community that still have that."

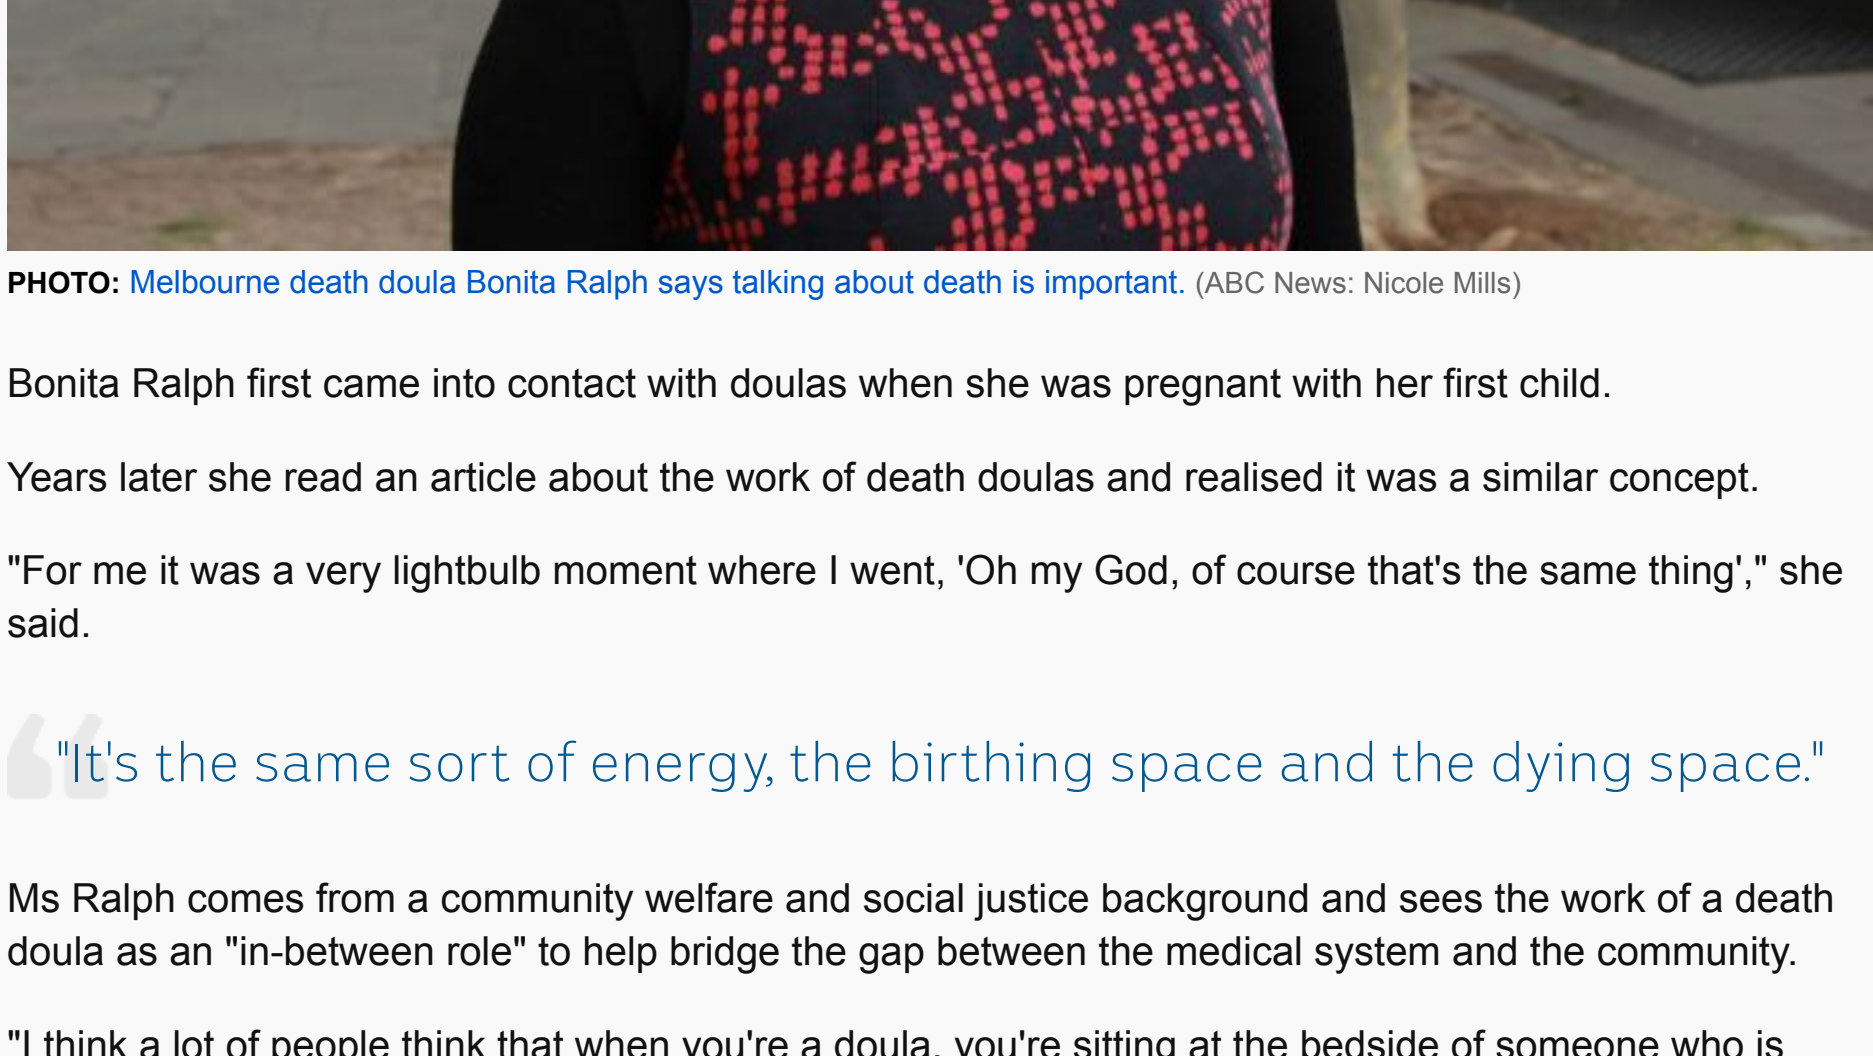

PHOTO: Melbourne death doula Bonita Ralph says talking about death is important. (ABC News: Nicole Mills)

Bonita Ralph first came into contact with doulas when she was pregnant with her first child.

Years later she read an article about the work of death doulas and realised it was a similar concept.

"For me it was a very lightbulb moment where I went, 'Oh my God, of course that's the same thing'," she said.

"It's the same sort of energy, the birthing space and the dying space."

Ms Ralph comes from a community welfare and social justice background and sees the work of a death doula as an "in-between role" to help bridge the gap between the medical system and the community.

"I think a lot of people think that when you're a doula, you're sitting at the bedside of someone who is dying, and that hasn't been my experience yet," she said.

"I think that may come, it may not, and that's OK because I think the doula role, for me, is broader than that.

"A doula is a companion, someone to walk with you, someone to support you in your choices and that absolutely applies to end-of-life care and death."

Know your choices

Ms Ralph said one of the best things people could do was spend time reflecting on their own experience with death and understand where their knowledge about death comes from.

"I think we're moving really slowly towards acknowledging that if we don't have role models and experiences, then we actually don't know what to do," she said.

"They need to know that it's not illegal to take someone who has died home. It's not illegal to organise your own funeral. You don't need a funeral director. It's a lot of work and maybe I wouldn't suggest it; logistically it's tricky, but it's not impossible.

"People do dig their own graves, the graves of family members. That is not impossible. There are options out there."

Ms Ralph said these options would not be for everyone, and while Australia was blessed to have a good medical system, it was important to know your choices.

"I don't want people to feel like they're being forced or that there's a right or wrong way to do death," she said.

"Death is so important because if you don't offer good support, if you don't offer genuine response to what that family needs, there's going to be complicated bereavement results because people don't move through and grow with their grief. They can get stuck."

She said often people found it easier to talk openly about death with a doula, but she always encouraged people to have those same conversations at home so their next of kin understood their wishes.

"Talking about death is not weird. It's important.

"Ask anyone who has had to work through a complicated death process such as a tragic death or complicated families or someone has died and left everything undone and the family has to pick up the pieces.

"Have these conversations when you're young and well and alive and engaged, and have these conversations ongoing because things change. Relationships change. Expectations change. So don't be afraid and keep having that conversation."

Events are being held across Australia on August 8 for Dying to Know Day, which aims to start conversations around death, dying and bereavement.

For more information and to find events near you visit the Dying to Know Day website.

Topics: death, grief, religion-and-beliefs, health, people, human-interest, community-and-society, melbourne-3000

More stories from Victoria

24-HOUR TELEPHONE COUNSELLING

IF YOU NEED TO TALK TO SOMEONE, CALL:

- Lifeline on 13 11 14
- Kids Helpline on 1800 551 800
- MensLine Australia on 1300 789 978
- Suicide Call Back Service on 1300 659 467
- Beyond Blue on 1300 22 46 36
- Headspace on 1800 650 890
- QLife on 1800 184 527

ABC RELIGION & ETHICS

- Religious Freedom and the Rights of LGBTI People: Lessons of Recent History
- Against Religious Nationalism: Philip Gorski and the Prospect of a 'Righteous Republic'
- No Foreign Country: Indigenous History is Essential to Counter Neoliberal Ideology

TOP STORIES

- Anning's 'final solution' comment a 'shocking insult' to Holocaust survivors
- What caused the Genoa bridge collapse? Here's what experts think could have gone wrong
- Opinion: If you're going to use the F-word, it might help to know what it really means
- The abusers who attack their partners and then play victim
- 'Too late to leave': Homes threatened as NSW bushfires take hold
- Opinion: From the mission to Italy: Two Indigenous boys stolen by a monk
- Firebomb attacks on homes and cars as Melbourne crime war escalates
- Poor body image in kids as young as eight may be linked to hormones: study
- When do people in your line of work retire?
- I'm happy with whatever': The Indian-Australians choosing arranged marriage
- Nick Kyrgios forgets his shoes, still wins opening match in Cincinnati
- 'That dog': Trump escalates feud with former White House aide Manigault Newman
- They're the rockstar aliens of the sea — and we don't know why they're increasing in numbers
- Analysis: Abbott's waning influence exposed in national energy guarantee party-room agreement
- UWA under fire for allowing US transgender sceptic to speak on campus
- Senator joins calls to remove 'hypocritical' GST that 'penalises newborns and mums'
- Who'd live in Vienna? For sport, beaches and pamas, Melbourne is still on top
- Priests in Pennsylvania have sexually abused hundreds of children since the 1950s: report
- Glitch switching off Samsung TVs in South Australia
- A town split in two as a wave of youth crime raises fears of vigilante justice
- Territories can make laws on abortion and medicinal cannabis, but not euthanasia. Here's why
- How to eat more green (and red and yellow) vegetables
- Living with mould: The 'tightrope walk' between landlords and tenants
- Hey honey! Want to keep bees? Here's what you need to know

Get the headlines to your mobile.

NEWS on Messenger

CONNECT WITH ABC NEWS

Facebook

Instagram

Twitter

YouTube

News

News Podcasts

Catch up with ABC News programs.

Podcast icon

GOT A NEWS TIP?

If you have inside knowledge of a topic in the news, contact the ABC.

NEWS IN YOUR INBOX

Top headlines, analysis, breaking alerts

Email address

Sign up

More info

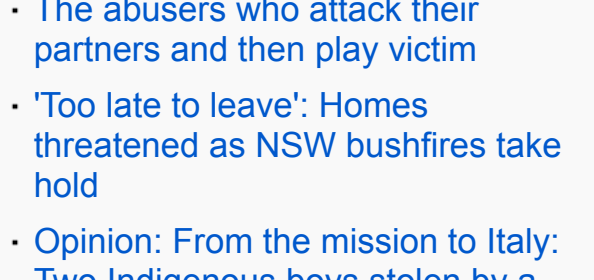

ABC BACKSTORY

ABC teams share the story behind the story and insights into the making of digital, TV and radio content.

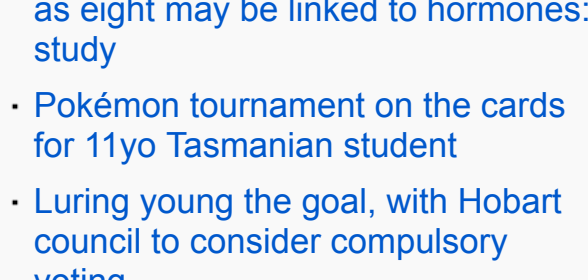

EDITORIAL POLICIES

Read about our editorial guiding principles and the enforceable standard our journalists follow.

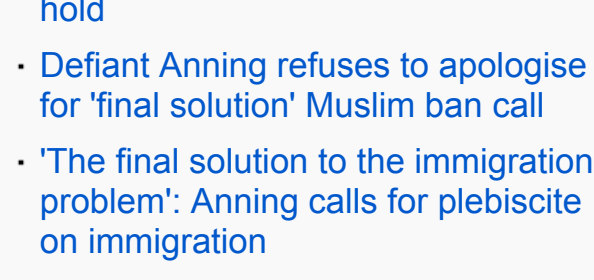

FEATURES

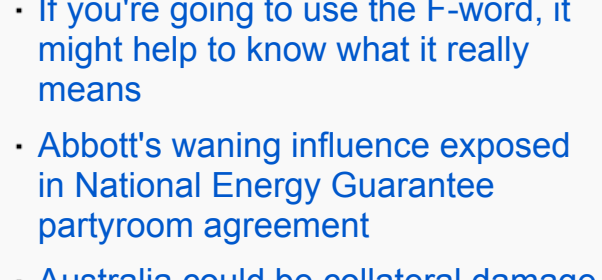

Melbourne v Vienna
Melbourne has just lost the crown of the world's most liveable city to Vienna, but there are many threads to a city's fabric that can't be scored by a number. So how do the two places really stack up?

Gifts for expectant parents
What do you get your friends who have just had a baby? New parents share their do's and don'ts when it comes to buying baby gifts.

Senator joins calls to remove 'hypocritical' GST
Senator David Leyonhjelm wants the removal of the GST from breastfeeding aids, as well as tampons and other sanitary products, on the agenda when the Government next meets with state treasurers.

How to keep bees
Before going out to buy your first colony, here are some tips, tricks and common mistakes novice beekeepers make.

TOP STORIES

- Anning's 'final solution' comment a 'shocking insult' to Holocaust survivors
- What caused the Genoa bridge collapse? Here's what experts think could have gone wrong
- Opinion: If you're going to use the F-word, it might help to know what it really means
- The abusers who attack their partners and then play victim
- 'Too late to leave': Homes threatened as NSW bushfires take hold
- Opinion: From the mission to Italy: Two Indigenous boys stolen by a monk
- Firebomb attacks on homes and cars as Melbourne crime war escalates
- Poor body image in kids as young as eight may be linked to hormones: study
- When do people in your line of work retire?
- I'm happy with whatever': The Indian-Australians choosing arranged marriage
- Nick Kyrgios forgets his shoes, still wins opening match in Cincinnati
- 'That dog': Trump escalates feud with former White House aide Manigault Newman
- They're the rockstar aliens of the sea — and we don't know why they're increasing in numbers
- Analysis: Abbott's waning influence exposed in national energy guarantee party-room agreement
- UWA under fire for allowing US transgender sceptic to speak on campus
- Senator joins calls to remove 'hypocritical' GST that 'penalises newborns and mums'
- Who'd live in Vienna? For sport, beaches and pamas, Melbourne is still on top
- Priests in Pennsylvania have sexually abused hundreds of children since the 1950s: report
- Glitch switching off Samsung TVs in South Australia
- A town split in two as a wave of youth crime raises fears of vigilante justice
- Territories can make laws on abortion and medicinal cannabis, but not euthanasia. Here's why
- How to eat more green (and red and yellow) vegetables
- Living with mould: The 'tightrope walk' between landlords and tenants
- Hey honey! Want to keep bees? Here's what you need to know

JUST IN

- Tonga's PM challenges Pacific leaders to year-long weight loss competition
- Colonial First State trustee charged fees to dead people, royal commission hears
- Fairfax profit tumbles ahead of Nine takeover
- Poor body image in kids as young as eight may be linked to hormones: study
- Pokémon tournament on the cards for 11yo Tasmanian student
- Luring young the goal, with Hobart council to consider compulsory voting
- Wages maintain sluggish growth of 2.1 per cent over the year
- The 'ultimate liberator': Gupta launches billion-dollar renewables program
- The fractured Liberals need a new brand — their 'broad church' is no longer working
- When do people in your line of work retire?

MOST POPULAR

- More than two dozen dead in Italian bridge collapse
- Jetstar is paying its cabin crew as little as $100 a week
- What caused the Genoa bridge collapse? Here's what experts think could have gone wrong
- 'Too late to leave': Homes threatened as NSW bushfires take hold
- Defiant Anning refuses to apologise for 'final solution' Muslim ban call
- 'The final solution to the immigration problem': Anning calls for plebiscite on immigration
- If you're going to use the F-word, it might help to know what it really means
- Waves of garbage are washing ashore in the Philippines
- Firebomb attacks on homes and cars as Melbourne crime war escalates
- Anning's 'final solution' comment a 'shocking insult' to Holocaust survivors

ANALYSIS & OPINION

- The fractured Liberals need a new brand — their 'broad church' is no longer working
- From the mission to Italy: The tragic story of two Indigenous boys stolen by a monk
- Newspaper's bid to topple Mike Nahan finds no Liberals willing to take on the challenge
- If you're going to use the F-word, it might help to know what it really means
- Abbott's waning influence exposed in National Energy Guarantee partyroom agreement
- Australia could be collateral damage in Trump's economic 'war' with Turkey
- To burn or not to burn: Can Australia learn from Sweden's rubbish-to-energy strategy?
- Soldiers don't belong on public streets, so why does Peter Dutton need military call-out powers?
- Tiger Woods show suggests bright future for champion Brooks Koepka
- The skills you need to boost before your child starts school

SITE MAP

Sections ABC News Just In World Business Health Entertainment Sport Analysis & Opinion Weather Topics Archive Corrections & Clarifications	Local Weather Sydney Weather Melbourne Weather Adelaide Weather Brisbane Weather Perth Weather Hobart Weather Darwin Weather Canberra Weather	Local News Sydney News Melbourne News Adelaide News Brisbane News Perth News Hobart News Darwin News Canberra News	Media Video Audio Photos	Subscribe Podcasts NewsMail	Connect Upload Contact Us
---	--	---	--	--	--

Change to mobile view

This service may include material from Agence France-Presse (AFP), APTN, Reuters, AAP, CNN and the BBC World Service which is copyright and cannot be reproduced.

AEST = Australian Eastern Standard Time which is 10 hours ahead of GMT (Greenwich Mean Time)